

Welcome to the funhouse friend—so paint your face and join the Carnival crowd!

They sell some laughter in old glass jars, and you can trade your old brown shoes for Cinderella's dancing slippers.

the drunken gypsy sits in her dark corner piping dreams from nature rides, breaking them upon your face
for a mere palm of silver—

They claim the joy-rides can tear you to pieces
but you don't believe it —
you can't stop laughing, and everywhere the children are screaming—

they've lost their reflections in the funhouse mirror
in the response willow

Yes friend —
life is real.
Won't you come again?

J. Normile

Benjie - What a beautiful relationship we've had - it's so gratifying for me you as a student.

As rhythmic as waves breaking
on the shore,
So must have been the creation of the earth.

It echoes through life
as soft petulant purrs
of beady-eyed kittens, Clothes on a line blowing in the breeze

of a sunny day,
The moaning sighs of a mother bringing new life
into the world,

The soft murmurs of a whimpering child,
And the groaning of old men in parks

on benches
through misty
Sunday mornings,
And the rumbling of death upon a city,

And a shovel hitting ground with the melody
of infinite mortality ...

 I can understand the sounds I hear They mean love, peace, and life.

The tide ebbed to and fro, pulled gently by angel's wings.
 It shimmered relentlessly, lightly flecked with radiating sunlight rolling its life unto the ivory sand.

The intense, forceful rays of the brilliant blinding sun,
 bleached the pure pearl sand with a sheen of silver streaks.
 Shades of orange - red images swirled into a whirlwind of soft shadows, warm and alive against my lids.

The waves approved of my presence, loudly applauding my arrival on the shore and affectionately licking my ankles goodbye when I had to leave.

Buds of promise blossom forming a cradle bed of dreams; Dreams I would like to share with you,
