D E L I G H T

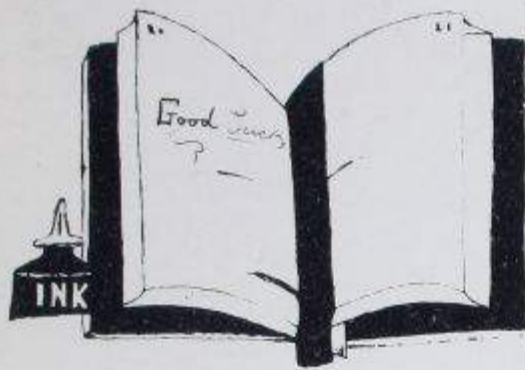

As many of you boys and girls know, I have often asked you just what experiences in and out of school have really taught you about life. Now, I ask you again what would your ideal school be like, what kind of institution would you want to attend to the end of your days? What manner of learning would be a joy forever? Sounds zany, doesn't it?

But it isn't! Just think of some book, or play or poem or concert or dance, to which you have become attached, some work of art, perhaps a phantom ship, that you carry around in your mind or soul or pocket or handbag, something of great delight. I have dreamed again and again of a whole long series of delights that such a school should be.

J. B. Priestley has been my able colleague in this matter of Delight. He has written a whole book under that title. Professing to be an incorrigible old grumbler, he has set down in one hundred eleven essays one hundred and eleven ways in which he can enjoy life at its superlative best—all the way from "Coming of an Idea" to "Not Having to Bring a Report Card Home to His Father." In one of his little pieces he tells of high "Moments in the Morning" when he arrives in his study like a demigod who has been given a planet to play with. When he, a writer, gets down to it, his work will be wonderful. "And brighter than the gilt along the bookshelves are the illusions of the moment . . . critics are kind and wise . . . readers and audiences, are enchanted . . . income tax is sixpence in the pound . . . the United Nations consist of united nations . . . and high and shining in the regard of all good folk everywhere is that sagacious, witty and tender, profound writer . . ." (more to come).

I too have had my High Moments in the Morning—and in the Afternoon. A few days ago, responding dejectedly to a seriously unfavorable criticism of our work, Mr. Luloff and I, spontaneously and unannounced, took off on a two-hour safari through the Main Building, leaving no student or teacher unturned. When we were back again in the office, we looked at each other in a kind of dazed bewilderment and shook hands to prove that we were still in a real world. We had started out to carp but remained to praise. Literally we had seen nothing to criticize adversely, pupils and teachers were dynamic and creative in shops and classrooms. Eager, industrious, sometimes brilliant activity—everywhere. A little later, somewhat fearful of my continued good fortune, I set out solo on a similar tour in Performing Arts—with Dr. Paine figuratively at my side. At the end of an hour and a half I was thrilled with the perceptive, imaginative, creative, live dynamism of our boys and girls, men and women.

Then there was the day on the John W. Brown! Socony Day. The Superintendent, Captain, Engineer and five other Socony officials were there, along with Grace Brennan, Director of Cooperative Education, and Charles O'Toole, Director of Placement from the Board of Education. Best of all were the parents of five graduates who are sailing on Socony ships. Capt. Schellings and the teachers were gracious hosts. As in the Main Building and S.P.A., the students this time in merchant marine uniforms, were superb.

I know—you will read this and say, "It can't all be true at any one time." You will show it to your parents and, if they are kind, they will simply raise many eyebrows. But it is true, for we are talking about moments in the morning, of immediately observable work and conduct, of general impressions. And all this is wonderful.

If you will concede this much then let's go back to Mr. Priestley—Here is the "(more to come):" ". . . sagacious, witty, tender, profound writer . . . who, now waking from his daydream, sits down, a fat, grumpy fellow to slog away until lunchtime." Of course, we know that Priestley is really sagacious, witty, and so on, and that his work too is wonderful, just because he can both dream and slog away. We know still better that underneath, and therefore supporting these beautiful pictures of school life, are sweat, pains, and tears, as well as intelligence and good will. We know that other tours at other times can and do turn up all sorts of weaknesses and defects . . . But these particular tours revealed the best.

Your life in school should parallel what goes on in the world around you. Before and behind the production of a beautiful play or concert, the exhibition of stunning photographs, the proud sailing of an American liner out of New York Harbor, lies all the strange conflict of tense human beings—the struggle for power, status and for fair play. This means one hundred twenty concerned adults and nearly two thousand eager young people, each one working for his or her own finest development as well as for that of all others, must live and learn and sometimes clash—in an institution called a school. It means that somebody must keep the tempers temperate, the bearings cool, and the atmosphere clear. And that's why I, after painting a charming (and wholly accurate) picture of your production—Metropolitan Vocational High School—must wake up and slog away until, and after, lunchtime—and so will you, if you want to be happy.

That you may slog away incessantly, successfully, beautifully, and happily, is the earnest wish of your principal—

FRANKLIN J. KELLER

NATHAN LULOFF, Administrative Assistant

Dear Graduates:

Whenever we bid a farewell to our young men and women on graduation day, we earnestly hope that some of them will accept our invitation to come back and see us. It is very heartening when these invitations are accepted and graduates return to inform us of their accomplishments. We also find it gratifying when the graduate still considers us in an advisory capacity and seeks our advice or assistance.

On behalf of the entire faculty, I extend the invitation to our Class of 1956. Visit us if for no other reason than to give us a friendly greeting and to let us know how well you are doing. Good Luck and Best Wishes.

A LONGING FOR THE OPEN SEA

by GEORGE WHITNEY

Thar she be! That proud sleek ship, plowing through the choppy sea; fearing not man nor angry waves, as strong as a Bull and proving so. As she thunders towards the bay. A journey's end, a tired ship, a few repairs, then under way; for that proud ship, it's back to sea.

Boards might crack, sails might tear, more work for the crew in sight, but they worry more for they're headed out there, out where they long to be. Tis a longing fulfilled, a longing for the Open Sea.

MORNING

by DANIEL COLON

The Mist rolls in from the sea,
And covers the city like a blanket.
The golden rays shine through Waking the mass and they begin
To move slowly but surely
By push and pull
The mist then disperses
And the children appear on the way to school

VAST AND GREAT

by ALFRED SAMUELSEN

The sea at times is very strange,
Within its vast and undivided range.
At times it is angry, others still,
Yet it commands my entire will.

It carries the weight of many ships
When it roughly rises and gracefully dips
And yet, if angry, can claim them all
Down to Davy's locker they must fall.

FRANK H. PAINE, Teacher in charge, School of Performing Arts

To the Class of 1956

Your consistent progress as a contributing member of this large class of graduates has helped you, in a measure, to formulate plans for your place in this unsettled world. In this enlightened age when inventions and discoveries force many individuals to change their plans for earning a livelihood, you will find your pathway through life brightened by the radiant colors of hope and faith. As soon as you understand that the possibilities for individual and social betterment are limitless, you will realize that what you do for yourself and for others will be of paramount importance. All of us should learn early in life that we must place values on our thoughts and actions in terms of what society expects from us. Always remember that our ideals are reflected in our daily activities and that we must constantly test these ideals to keep in tune with the rhythm and forward movement of our friends and neighbors.

Independence of spirit, resoluteness of purpose and self-reliance have been constant sources of strength to our freedom-loving people. Your education and training at PA have helped you to become a good citizen and a good neighbor to others. Through your daily associations with other members you have learned to work unselfishly for group success and mutual satisfaction—exemplifying the best traditions of our unique school. A devoted staff of teachers has endeavored to prepare you for the more important phases of life that are to follow. We are convinced that you have developed attitudes and work habits that will enable you to participate successfully in your chosen field. Your noble efforts will serve to inspire succeeding classes of graduates to march forward by combining intelligent study with successful performance.

We shall miss all of you as charming personalities that made earnest efforts to perfect your engaging personalities and performance skills that are necessary in the professional arts. We hope you will examine carefully all opportunities in terms of your goals, ideals and abilities. For your admirable traits, we shall think of you often. Whatever you do and wherever you go, always try to remember PA.

MOODS

by BARBARA MILLER

Rain
Cold, damp
Black cloud formations.
Thunder of cities degeneration.
Fleeting shadows in the night.
I am lost to the stars.
I walk the moors of the world.
The restless spirit ceases, and is hurled with contempt into the dark bars.
Despair awakens with the light.
Death of a generation again more degradation.
Cold, damp,
Rain.

Soul of man's being,
symbol of toil,
bearer of infinite tenderness
are you.
Heart of his love,
heart of his hate, yet devoid of emotion,
Barren with destruction
are you.
Long and lithe as the willow.
Impotent as dead wood
are you.
You blessed, accursed object—
hands.

The fools wear black.
They look, they mourn, they lament.
They tell me I am dead.
They say I shan't come back.
They bury me in cement.
No . . . there are words I've left unsaid.
I am not dead.

SONG

by KAREN MESAVAGE

What are we, we two?
What strange, vindictive thought produced us
(Expelled only to return with vile persistence,
Until, with sharp staccato movements,
caused us, in the Stygian blackness of the womb,
To be conceived);
Wearing the wailing cry of an unborn child
Into the hard-fantastic pattern of reality.
From what arched heights, into what quivering abyss
Were we so harshly flung
Those first, forgotten hours of our lives?
From whose fertile loins did we spring
Like wild and willful flowers,
That we are here?
Where is our mother;
Why were we shorn from her?

They say we are God's children; we have no other.
If this is so, why are we watched askance
And why must our love be incognito?
Wandering through the simian crowd,
While each familiar silhouette averts its face?

What are we, we two?
We are but fragments of the whims of kings;
The union of light and darkness
Which never could, and never will exist.
Yet we are here,
Why?
We do not know, nor dare to ask,
It is enough that we may travel hand in hand
Through the shadowed corridors of Infinity.
Forged by a chain of broken promises,
We were brought forth not of our own volition
And planted here
By Eternity's Sea.

QUESTION

by JUDY KANNER

We sit in wonder
As the busy earth
Rotates in an ever widening orbit.
We stand and wait
For a miracle to happen—
A great clap of thunder
To rip itself from the Heart of heaven and tell us
Why we sit in wonder.

ON

KOL NIDRE

by WENDY HETKIN

He is youth
He gives with his heart and soul, as only youth can give
He offers you his heart
Without askance of its acceptance
He sees beauty in this music
Beauty to be worshipped
He wants to tell you
He wants you to see
What he sees
This is what is important
You must see—he will not let you be blind
If only to let you see a little
And he is youth, and you see,
A little.

HOPE

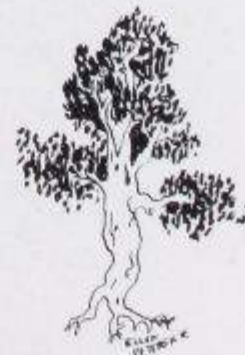

by ELEANOR ROSMAN

Life is a fairy tale conceived from the hearts of men
High on a mountain top in the land of promises
Hope is a fairy child, white throat and lily hands
Singing on the mountain top—lovely, sad, alluring
Life is a wistful dream, vague, brief and fleeting
Hope is the wanton child who drives men to dreaming
Dreams on a passing train; driven by a fairy child
Hope is the fairy child, wanton and bittersweet
High on a mountain top beckoning.

LULLABY

by JUDY KANNER

We sit and warm our toes
While the fire crackles and glows
Hush! Beware!
Close your ears to the hungry
Cries surrounding.
Hush!
Our stomachs are full—
We cannot move,
We fit so nicely
In the well worn groove,
Hush! Beware!
Close your ears to the war chants—
Loud resounding,
Hush!

Ah, deep-cruled earth—
How like you am I!
I, too, am parched and trampled upon;
I, too, am longing for the rain for which I seem forever
to be searching;
But my search will remain unending.
Greed will take and hold its course,
And once more, I, too, shall be crushed.

I grow in a field where there be no master;
I am as rude as daylight.
There will be no victor—nor could there be.
Each must become a part of the other,
As life is but the prologue to death.

I cannot stay planted in my field for long;
I must move with such passion that my very roots be torn upward.
And then shall I spread to the mind of man.
I run across the field
To the darker end, where man exists.

I can see the hazy black of column of smoke:
It is good to discover the black-bending, twisting, reaching aloft to the whites of the sky.
Slowly the black blends into the white till they become one—
As in my field.

A voice cries to me:
"It is wrong to love the smoke;
There is not room for such love in this world.
You must choose whether you would love the black or the white."

MEDITATION

by GARY PORTADIN

"That is not true," I answer;
"There are as many interpretations of love
As there are objects to love."
But the voice will not listen;
It will not let the smoke rise;
The smoke will be destroyed—
Afraid of the white,
Afraid of the voice,
Afraid, even, of me.
A bird flies overhead,
Flies to the disappearing mists of smoke;

But the voice pays no heed to it, either,
The bird is outwitted
And falls dead.
Motionless on the turbulent earth.
I can do nought but pick the bird up:
It sits in my hand
Cold and limp;
Its face juts outward,
Its feet softly scratching the surface of my skin,
It looks at me
With dead eyes.

I lie awake at night;
I think of the bird.
Why should it die:
It was one of many.
The smoke is gone . . .
Soon I shall sink into the parched earth
And long for the rain—
Maybe it will come.

What is the grandest joy of all?
The most splendid on the earth?
That is the gift given by God,
The angelic gift of Birth.

A seed is planted in the ground,
Deep under and out of view.
And soon the ground doth part away,
And the flower comes peeping through.

'Tis Birth!

The stem stands tall and as proud as you please,
And each of its petals dances gaily in the breeze.
Its fragrance delicious, its presence so grand,
'Tis the friend of the sky and the child of the land.

'Tis Life!

The days grow cold and the land grows dry,
It is time for the flower to say good-bye.
Good-bye to all the friends it's known,
No longer may it sit upon its throne.
Good-bye to the trees and the grass and the sky,
To all of these it must say good-bye.
Its petals have all been blown away,
And its elegant stem bends more each day.
And the ground doth part to claim its son,
And the flower's life on earth is done!
And the flower's life on earth is done!

'Tis Death!

The Beginning of the End

by ARLEEN UDOFF

What is the grandest joy of all?
The most splendid on the earth?
That is the gift given by God,
The angelic gift of Birth.
His skin doth wrinkle,
His face doth hollow.
He finds it hard to breathe and swallow
He can not walk,
He can not bend.
He knows his life is approaching an end.
His life has become so empty and dim,
His children no longer have interest in him.
He's useless, dependent,
He's feeble and old.
His life is slowly beginning to fold.

The body is buried; Death's battle is won,
And the human's life on earth is done!
And the human's life on earth is done!

'Tis Death!—The angelic gift of Birth!

Yellow, orange, pink, red, purple, goes the artist's palette. Progressing similarly, is the P.A. student.

Fresh, pure, exuberant, anxious, and trusting is the new freshman. Four glorious years of learning, in a holy sanctuary appear before their dewy eyes. Their attire reflects their point of view. Short, curly un-assaulted hair! Cheeks lightly rouged, so as not to appear made up, and "Pixy Pink," by "Milkmaid." Crinolines by the thousands stand in room 201, much to the dismay of Mrs. Bank. Flats, anklets, and a shoulder strap bag, complete the picture.

Ah, life is but a few fleeting years; hold on to and love every minute, for time is short.

Fresh, a little less pure, exuberant, anxious and not quite so trusting is the P.A. sophomore.

The curls seem to have disappeared, and in their place . . . behold! A mane, halfway down her back! We wonder . . . her neck so white, and her face so red. Why, one can almost see the lines where the two facets of her personality meet. The Pixy in her must have disappeared, and in its place, "Sultry Red," by "Hazel Bishop." She has acquired a spot of black, or is that a beauty mark protruding from her temple? Something new has been added: an extra two inches of silver from her ear lobes. The crinolines still linger, so perhaps all is not lost. She appears to have grown over the summer, a good four inches from her ankles down. Harlequin glasses and a hat box complete the tableau.

Ah, life is but a few fleeting years; hold on to and love every minute, for it is exciting and time is short.

There seems to be weariness in our student's step. Perhaps it's appendicitis. No, more likely it's "Junioritis."

A M E N

by ELLEN WEINSTEIN

Not so fresh, or pure, or exuberant, or anxious, or trusting. The curls and the mane have disappeared, under a black shawl, draped in an Isadora Duncan fashion. The line of "demarkation" and the Hazel Bishop, too, are gone. To replace them? White powder, and a thin black-pencil line surrounding the eye. Farewell to horse-hair and tulle, the black sheath is moving in. The height of the student is back to normal. From her heels now are strings, hundreds of them, winding in and out of various places, and eventually resigning themselves at her thighs. Jewelry? That's bourgeois. No, the persecuted, the minority, have no time for luxuries. Ah, life is but a few fleeting years . . . Thank God! !

The senior year? We're almost afraid to look. Nevertheless, there seems to be an air of serenity about. Much older? No . . . Much wiser? No . . . More sensible? Yes, from necessity, mostly. The world won't be as tolerant of our phases as you have been, Performing Arts. We were lucky to have you to try them out on. Now we can begin to find ourselves as individuals.

Ah, life is but a few fleeting years; hold on to, and love every minute, for time is short.

Amen to that.

AND THEN HE CRIED

by PATRICIA DUTY

A boy stood on a lonely beach, his bare feet dug under the wet sand and his eye lifted to the sky, an immense black pall covering the crib and coffin of life. The breath of the universe breathed through his hair. He watched the sea's many hands grasping continually at the aged sand. As he glared at the sky he whimpered, and then hung his head as if in a deep sleep. He turned to go, a dark slumped shadow of a being, but made a sudden turn, lifted his head to the world above and shouted and cried for an answer to this incoherent domain. He listened, but the only reply was a soft splash of the water, and a low hum of the breeze. He tried again, fiercely demanding an answer, but was met with the same response. He fell to his knees, grasped the sand and let it run through his fingers, as if the answer would pour out of his youthful hands. But to no avail. The cool dust was as silent as its brothers. And then he cried. Because he was alone and lost, and could do nothing else, he cried. He looked up once more, the hot salty tears making his face stiff, and again he asked, no, he begged humbly for an answer. He begged again and again and again.

And as the tears have run down his face, so have they left their mark. Their stiff wrinkled path is almost complete. And as the wind blows his hair, so does his white mane still flow with it. And his frail feet grasp the sand, and his creviced hands pour the earth's dust through them. And his eyes, drawn and heavy, futilely seek an answer.

Speculations on a Train

by MARCIA BENDER

The train pushed further and further cutting the green and speckled fields, and my heart
and my love
These my body did not possess.
We try to hold on too long—we human beings,
We reflect the pessimism of our times,
and the loneliness of our soul.
The neat flat fields of Ohio lay before me, and my very being forced its way deep into the imaginary crevices of the earth.
I wanted to lie on the wet earth and sink deeper and deeper
waiting for my love to lift me out.
My body was flung out and suspended between the sky and the water, and my heart could not reach the blossoms of the earth.
